

Abstract

A manufacturing system for the manufacture of columns, beams and any other member of a structure is provided, based on the integration of two open cross section elongated members that - being joined to each other, so that their main axes are parallel to the main axis of the column or beam they conform - permit the manufacture of a wide variety of closed and hollow structural elements by using a small number of the above mentioned open cross section elongated members.